Tried to call you. Am writing a blurb on Flints infrastructure crisis.

Can I quote you, as part of all the people, who are now finding from monitoring, that the Flint water quality is much improved since before the switch in October 2014?
Can I also say Michigan State is finding that as well?

There is obviously Water Defense and friends, saying things are actually getting worse with every passing moment. Marc

Hey Mark, thanks for the email. I was at a conference today and just returned home this evening. Sorry I missed your call.

I was able to watch the majority of your most recent press release and have a pretty good understanding of your position about Flint water. At this time, based on the data I've seen presented by you and others, and data collected by our team of scientists, public health professionals and engineers, I believe it is premature to draw conclusions about the quality of Flint water. I cannot support this statement at this time.

Thanks, Shawn
